Types of school

There are basically two types of schools in Catalonia - public schools and private schools.

Public schools are fully state-funded, tuition free and secular. They follow the local curriculum approved by the Catalan authorities in accordance with the Spanish Education Act. The Catalan education system is of high quality and is based on equity and excellence. For this reason, many international families find this an attractive option and choose the local system for their children.

Private schools are privately owned and managed and may or may not be secular. The purely private schools do not receive any government subsidies, so the cost of schooling is mainly covered by families. Each private school has its own enrolment process and entry criteria, so families interested in these schools should contact the schools directly for more information.

There is a segment of private schools (known as concertades) that receive subsidies that cover the cost of basic educational needs. To receive these subsidies, private schools that are concertades need to fulfil certain curricular and legislative criteria which includes abiding by the same enrolment process as public schools.

Languages and curriculums

It is important for international families to understand that both Catalan and Spanish are the official languages in Catalonia and these languages are used in the public education system, with Catalan being the most widely used language. After completing compulsory schooling (from 6 to 16 years of age), students are fluent in both languages and have an adequate knowledge of at least one foreign language.

Non-subsidised private schools in the Barcelona Area also teach Catalan and Spanish and often use a different language as the main language of instruction, such as English or French, among others.

In this publication you will find lists of schools situated in Barcelona and the surrounding areas that offer an international education. Although it has been created with international families in mind, anyone with an interest in multilingual schooling and international curriculums or academic qualifications should find this a valuable resource.
